FINN LAW OFFICES SEEKS JUSTICE FOR VICTIMS OF SCHOOL BULLYING, HARASSMENT AND DISCRIMINATION

The Queensbury Union Free School District and several District officials are facing a $5 million-dollar federal lawsuit due to its failure to protect two students that attended the William H. Barton Intermediate School in Queensbury, NY.

The Complaint outlines a pattern of bullying, harassment and discrimination by other students while the infant plaintiffs rode a District school bus. It is alleged that the School officials were well aware of numerous complaints involving sexually graphic and disturbing behavior by students on the bus yet chose not to take remedial action to stop the behavior. Amongst the many substantiated allegations in the case: the infant plaintiffs (then in fifth grade) were threatened with rape, and, were told to engage in sexual activity with their siblings by older students on the bus.

Attorney for the victims, Ryan Finn stated: “It is about time these School Districts start paying attention and take bullying and harassment seriously. Our children are being victimized and schools are simply ignoring the problem; ignoring their obligation to investigate and report the behavior; and, ignoring their obligation to take action to stop these abuses from occurring again in the future. This is a crisis in our public schools.”
